

HOW TO READ ANY VIRAL ACCOUNT

Find out what it's really selling

"The way they make money is not through platform rewards. They put a link in their bio that directs all the traffic they get to some kind of offer."

The thread was pulled by @sabrina_ramonov
Written out by Stefanie Zucker

Four questions. Run them on any account that keeps showing up in your feed and you will know within about 5 minutes whether there is a business behind it, and where the money actually enters. None of this needs a tool. It is all visible from the outside, which is the point: if you can see it, you can decide whether it is worth copying.

1 Where does the bio link actually go?

Tap it. Then keep going, because most of them land on a link hub first and the hub is not the answer. Follow it through to the last page and note the domain.

- It lands somewhere they own — a site, a store, a checkout. That is the business.
- It lands on someone else's site — with a code or a tag in the URL. They are paid on what you buy there, not on views.
- There is no link at all — they are not selling to you yet. Either they are still building the audience, or the account itself is the product.

2 What is for sale when you get there, and what does it cost?

Find the price and write it down. It is the fastest way to tell a business from a hobby.

- A physical product — something that ships.
- An information product — a course, a template pack, a guide, a membership.
- A service — they do the work for you.

3 Where do they take your name?

Look for the moment they stop renting attention and start owning a contact.

- Comment a keyword — and a bot DMs you.
- DM a keyword — for a free thing.
- An email for a download — a guide, a checklist, a swipe file.
- A waitlist or a quiz — that asks for an address before it answers.

4 What has to be true about the content for that to work?

Open their last 10 posts and read them as a set instead of one at a time.

- Same call to action every time? — Then it is a machine, not a person having thoughts.
- Same offer at the end of all of them? — The content is the advertising.
- Posting daily, or several times a day? — Volume is doing the work that quality would otherwise have to do.

Reading the answers

All four answered	You have the whole business. The account is the top of the funnel, not the funnel.
1 and 2 answered, 3 blank	They are selling on impulse only. Everything depends on the platform keeping them visible.
3 answered, 1 and 2 blank	They are building a list before they have something to sell. Early, and often deliberate.
Nothing answered	It is a hobby, or you are looking at someone else's advertising and have not found whose yet.

The one worth stealing: question 3. Not the volume, not the automation. The habit of turning attention into a contact you own, before the platform changes its mind. That part works exactly the same whether you are running 40 accounts or one real one.