

THE FILL-IN-THE-BLANK VERSION

Stop typing random stuff at ChatGPT.

Four blanks. Fill them in, paste the whole thing, and you get a different quality of answer, because you finally told it what you actually wanted.

The CARE framework is Sabrina Ramonov's, and huge thanks to her for it. This page is just the template written out, because you can't paste from a video.

CARE stands for Context, Action, Result, Example. Most prompts fail because they only ever include the Action, the thing you want, and leave the other three to chance.

The template

Copy this whole thing. Replace everything in [brackets]. Delete nothing else.

C – CONTEXT

You are a [role / expertise]. Here is my situation: [who you are, what you already know, what you're working on, anything that changes the answer].

A – ACTION

I want you to [the one specific thing you want done].

R – RESULT

Give it to me as [format: bullet list / table / email / 200-word summary / step-by-step], [length], [tone].

E – EXAMPLE

Here is an example of what good looks like:

[paste a sample sentence, paragraph, or output you already like]
Match this style.

What each letter is actually doing

LETTER	WHAT IT SETS	WHAT GOES WRONG WITHOUT IT
C — Context	Who it should be, and what it needs to know about your situation	You get a generic answer written for nobody in particular
A — Action	The one thing you want done	It tries to do four things at once and does all of them badly
R — Result	Shape, length, tone of the output	You get nine paragraphs when you wanted a table
E — Example	What “good” looks like to you	It writes in its own voice instead of the one you wanted

A filled-in one, so you can see the shape

C — You are a 12th grade science teacher. I'm an adult who hasn't studied physics since school and I'm trying to understand black holes well enough to explain them to my kid.

A — Explain what a black hole is and what an event horizon is.

R — Give it to me as five short paragraphs, plain English, no equations, under 400 words.

E — Here's the style I want: "A magnet doesn't pull on wood. It only pulls on certain things, and once you know which, magnets stop being mysterious."
Match that — everyday comparisons, short sentences.

Two more you can steal

Rewriting something you've already written

C — You are a direct, unsentimental editor. This is a [email / post / paragraph] for [audience].

A — Rewrite it so it's clearer and shorter, without losing anything that matters.

R — Give me the rewrite first, then three bullets on what you changed and why.

E — Here's writing I like the sound of: [paste two or three sentences].
Match that voice.

Pressure-testing a decision

- C – You are a sceptical advisor with no stake in the outcome. Here's my situation: [the decision, the constraints, what I've already ruled out].
- A – Argue the strongest case AGAINST the option I'm leaning toward, then tell me what would have to be true for it to be the right call.
- R – Two sections, no hedging, under 300 words.
- E – Be blunt like this: "You're not short of time, you're short of a decision. Pick one and find out."

Three things that make it work harder

- The Example is the one people skip, and it's the strongest. Two sentences of writing you like will move the output further than another paragraph of instructions.
- Keep it in one conversation. Follow-ups inherit the context you already set, so you don't have to repeat it.
- If the answer's wrong, look at which letter you left vague. Wrong tone is usually a missing E, wrong length is a missing R.

Framework by Sabrina Ramonov. Written out by Stefanie Zucker.

